A bag of potato chips for a happy babysitter

I just read the letter from the woman who complained about a sitter who helped herself to a third of pie and ate large holes in the company ham. I agree a sitter has no right to do this but there are two sides to every story. May I speak for the thousands of babysitters who get so hungry they almost pass out?

I have sat in homes where a cockroach could starve to death. I realize the people I sit for don't owe me a banquet, Ann, but a growing girl who runs after children for five or six hours needs something to keep her strength up.

A bag of potato chips and a soft drink is not going to bankrupt anybody. If Mrs. Housewife would set something aside for the sitter she wouldn't have to worry about being eaten out of house and home.—MISS REASONABLE.

Dear Miss: Thank you for your suggestion on how Mrs. Housewife can best protect her company ham and guest pie against the famished sitter. I agree a sitter is entitled to a little refreshment, and a thoughtful lady will provide it.

Dear Ann Landers: I was impressed with the answer you gave "Ceiling Zero." I only hope the dumb bunny listens to you. If the kept women in this country knew what their married sweethearts really thought of them there would be a lot less back street action.

Three years ago I suspected my husband had a friend on the side. He denied it for two years and then I ran into him—checking into a motel one Saturday afternoon. She was outside in the car. I had dropped in to get some ice cream. When they saw me they'd have liked to die. My husband handed her money to take a taxi and then followed me home in his car. We had a frank talk and I told him he could have a divorce if he wanted it.

Did he accept my offer? He did not. He said she was nothing but a plaything and he would never marry her—that she wasn't fit to shine my shoes much less fill them. We both had a good cry and he begged me to forgive him and let him prove what a good husband he could be. I agreed to try it.

The following morning the woman called and asked me to forgive her. She said my husband told her I was an invalid and she was shocked to see me walk into that place.

So you see, Ann, liars play it both ways. Please publish this. It could be a post-graduate course in life for your readers.—HOLTER OF THE DIPLOMA.

Dear Holter: Are you listening, students?

BUSY AT A PROJECT in the Saturday School were Mrs. Gwen Lee and some pupils when a photographer visited the school during the spring session. Children are, from left, Shawn Adelman, Loretta Clark, Carol Latchford and Janice Clark. Mrs. Lee founded the school last January because she thinks both Negro and white children should learn more about Negro history and culture.

Toronto's interracial school

By BETTY STAPLETON
Star staff writer

Mrs. Gwen Lee is a young Toronto-born Negro woman who doesn't want to see her hometown racked with the racial violence prevalent in some U.S. cities.

"I feel there is very little hope for the States but there is hope here if people accept the fact that Toronto, with its growing Negro population, must have a working interracialism," she says.

Gwen found a way to put her positive theories into action earlier this year when she founded the Saturday School, a Saturday morning class at which both white and Negro children can take part in an interesting and productive program, and at the same time absorb some facts about Negro history and culture.

"It is necessary for both races to respect each other, but it is difficult to have this interracial respect unless you really know about the other race," says Gwen. The history and culture of the white race is taught in Toronto's public schools, her school will balance the educational scale by presenting the Negro's story, she hopes.

The project started modestly in January with an enrolment of 12 children between the ages of 5 and 10 meeting in the parish hall of Holy Rosary Roman Catholic Church, St. Clair Ave. W. Gwen was delighted when she got this accommodation for her Saturday School because the monthly fee of $8 paid for each student barely covers the cost of the materials used—plasticine, paint etc.

Art, films, drama, literature, games are all part of the program. A sculptress made a couple of visits to the school and taught clay modelling. One Saturday the children went down to the Royal Ontario Museum to see the exhibit of art from India and Nepal.

MRS. LEE WITH CELESTE, 3. She hopes to expand her school in fall

About 25 or 30 per cent of all the activities relate directly to Negro history and culture, although Gwen and her volunteer assistants made sure the children were not consciously aware that this was happening. They just knew they were having a stimulating time and most of them want to come back to the school this fall.

During its first season the school operated on a shoestring but Gwen hopes to see it expanding next season. She wants to accommodate more students of course and she wants to hire a paid staff, not rely on volunteers. She estimates she will need $3,000 to meet the school budget and right now her problem is getting that much.

Mrs. Lee, who attended North Toronto Collegiate and took one year of university, works as a computer program analyst. She is separated from her husband and has two children, Scott, 6, and Celeste, 3.

She doesn't speak much about any racial discrimination she experienced in her own school years, merely says "I was always aware of my differences" but she is critical of some attitudes the education system gives children.

"The type of literature available to children has strong color association—negativity is attached to black. A lot of people consider the words black and dirty interchangeable. The villains in the story are always black, so are witches," she says.

Negro parents have to counteract all this by giving their children the concept that "being black isn't bad." But there comes a time in the Negro child's development when his own parents' assurance isn't enough. Others in the community have to back up the idea, says Gwen.

Since she knows that a Negro child going to a predominantly white school is going to have some "negative" experience because he is black, Gwen has been watching her own son's progress through nursery school and kindergarten closely.

She is sure he has never been called an unpleasant name because of his color but she has noticed that he is sensitive to his own differences from the other children.

"He's asked me why his skin is a different color, why his hair is curlier and I have had to get across to him that being different can be a good thing."

The information parents, conscientious teachers, even Gwen with her Saturday School, want to put across on Negro history and culture is just not available.

"There are no interracial books at all for preschool children, and only about half a dozen for older children that deal with normal family life illustrated with pictures of Negroes."

Gwen would like to see more Saturday Schools dotted all over Metro, housed in community centres which could accommodate about 30 to 40 children a morning.

A new Twiggy

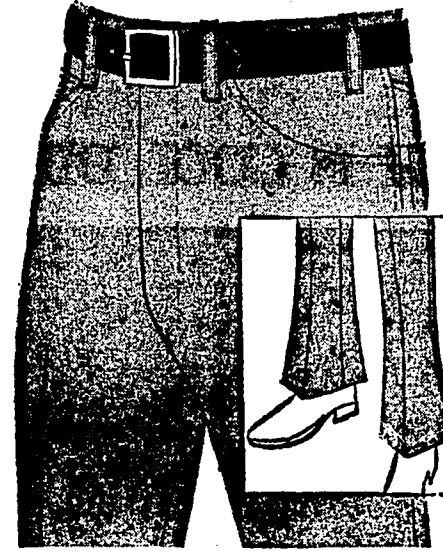

NEW YORK (AP) — Cor, you wouldn't 'arf recognize Twiggy these days. Word comes from London that the skinny little Cockney has renounced the mod look that made her fashion's golden tomboy at 16.

Now, at 18, Twiggy isn't a giggle anymore. She is, instead, a dreamy, girlish creature in romantic clothes.
