By ROBERT TAYLOR
Star Staff Writer

WASHINGTON — Evidence that agents of the U.S. crime syndicate recruit girls from Canadian cities and villages for white slave operations was given yesterday to the Senate sub-committee on operations.

The witness was William J. Scott of Chicago who, as special assistant to the U.S. attorney-general, has been conducting investigations of the crime syndicate's operations. Scott is Republican candidate for state treasurer of Illinois.

(Scott, after the committee rose, told The Star, "unquestionably" there are important crime links between the U.S. crime syndicate and Canada. He said that if asked to, he would be glad to testify about these links to the Ontario Royal Commission on Crime now under way.

Scores of Girls

(Mr. Justice W. D. Roach, who is conducting the crime commission in Toronto, would not say last night if the commission intended to invite Scott to Toronto to testify.

("You leave that up to us," Mr. Justice Roach said. "We're plugging along pretty well right now, don't you think?")

Scott told The Star scores of Canadian girls, including some from Toronto, moved to one of America's hot spots, Calumet City, on the fringe of Chicago.

One of the sub-committee members, Sen. Karl Mundt (R., S.D.), praised Scott as one of the most knowledgeable witnesses to have appeared before the committee. This is the well-known com-

Diefenbaker Charges Star Falsified Shoe Story

Special to The Star
GUELPH—Prime Minister Diefenbaker yesterday accused The Toronto Daily Star of "falsifying" a comment he had made on Premier Khrushchov's shoe-thumping incident at the United Nations in 1960.

The Star, in a story by Staff Writer Val Sears, quoted Mr. Diefenbaker in Montreal as saying: "I told Mr. Khrushchov, give the Ukrainians the vote, then he got mad and that's when he took off his shoe, you remember."

How Other Papers Reported Shoe Story

The story of Mr. Diefenbaker's Montreal speech about the U.N. incident received wide publicity in Canada. Here are a few examples of how other newspapers reported the story June 12:

Winnipeg Free Press by Vic Mackie.

"He told the 'new Canadians' of his determination to say what he thought at the United Nations despite the fact he had been 'warned' he would antagonize Premier Khrushchov of the USSR. He suggested that it was in protest over his demands that the Russians free their satellites, that the Soviet leader pounded his desk top at the U.N. with his shoe."

(Mr. Diefenbaker made his speech at the U.N. several days before Mr. Khrushchov pounded his shoe on the desk, during the address of another delegate to the United Nations.)

Toronto Telegram by Peter Dempson.

"Mr. Diefenbaker told these New Canadians of his collision at the United Nations in the fall of 1960 with Soviet Premier Khrushchov."

He suggested that it was in protest against his demand that the Russians free their satellites, that the Soviet leader, in an emotional outburst, pounded his desk top with his shoe."

Globe and Mail by Walter Gray.

"The Prime Minister said, that over the opposition of some, he went to the United Nations to speak up to Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchov."

"They said I shouldn't annoy Mr. Khrushchov. I don't want to annoy him. All I want to do is to give people the same freedom as others. He made his speech asking Britain and France why they have not ended colonialism. I said to him 'Physician, heal thyself.'"

"When Mr. Diefenbaker asked Mr. Khrushchov about the Baltic states, he got mad. 'I saw him with his smiles, his sneers and his shoes. Why should the talk always be on the other side? Why should we not speak for those in slavery?'"

(Mr. Khrushchov was not at the U.N. session when Mr.

cheyov's shoe-thumping incident at the United Nations in 1960.

The Star, in a story by Staff Writer Val Sears, quoted Mr. Diefenbaker in Montreal as saying: "I told Mr. Khrushchov, give the Ukrainians the vote, then he got mad and that's when he took off his shoe, you remember."

Mr. Diefenbaker told audiences in Guelph and Galt yesterday, "That statement was one I never made."

He said his reference was to the 1960 session at which the desk banging took place and he did not claim to have provoked the Soviet premier into thumping his desk.

He read portions of a Star editorial which said the Prime Minister was guilty of "outrageous fabrication" in claiming it was he who had set off the shoe-banging act. "The quotation," he said, "comes from one who didn't quote what was said."

"Even in an election campaign you would expect The Star to tell the truth. I say to The Star: Heal thyself."

Mr. Khrushchov's act took place 16 days after Mr. Diefenbaker's speech and the premier was not in the hall when the Prime Minister spoke.

The Prime Minister said this was the first time in the campaign he had made reference to The Star, and added, with sarcasm: "They are one of my major supporters."

Bootlegger Testifies

'STRINGER OFFERED HIDE-OUT'--WITNESS

Peterborough Alderman Geoffrey (Gyp) Feeley today told the Royal Commission on Crime that OPP Insp. Allan Stringer offered to hide Feeley in his attic a few days before Feeley was to surrender to police to serve a six-month sentence for bootlegging.

Feeley said he chose, instead, to surrender to the county jail where, because of intervention by the OPP Inspector, he served only one hour of the six-month term.

The Alderman said Insp. Stringer told him an injustice had been done and advised him to appeal to the attorney-general's department. He testified that W. C. Bowman, the present director of public prosecutions, told him at a meeting at Queen's Park that he would do something, but added that "the wheels of justice are slow turning."

Feeley, a confessed bootlegger for more than 30 years and a police informer, said there were a lot of things wrong in his home town that needed cleaning up.

They involved injustices, he claimed, that grew out of a judicial inquiry into the administration of the Peterborough police in 1957.

The commissioner, Mr. Justice W. D. Roach, was somewhat mystified as to why Feeley (no relation to gambler Vincent Feeley) wanted to testify. The commissioner said he certainly wasn't going to review the judicial report submitted by Mr. Justice F. G. MacKay.

Commission Counsel Roland F. Wilson informed his lordship that Feeley had been described by Mr. Justice MacKay as being "a vain, egotistical man" who appeared upset that his "lucrative bootlegging business" had been stopped by police.

He was further described by Mr. Justice MacKay as being a "completely untrustworthy witness and an undesirable citizen."

Mr. Justice Roach wanted to know whether Feeley was still upset by the remarks of Mr. Justice MacKay.

Mr. Feeley replied he was not and as for his character, "I was voted alderman last year and 45,000 people of Peterborough can't be wrong."

Beef Over Bottle

Mr. Feeley did have a beef that he wanted cleared up immediately. In 1954, he said, he had delivered a bottle to a cab driver at 2 a.m. The cabbie paid for the bottle and took it to a nearby car.

A woman in the car was able to tell Feeley that the Empress hotel had been robbed and "we're heading for the border." Feeley described how he went home, thought the matter over and decided he should tell police.

Later that night, he said, "the car was apprehended in Oshawa and as a result I was charged with bootlegging."

Ask Perjury Charge Against Balsom

The Royal Commission on Crime today was asked to lay charges of perjury against St. Catharines bookmaker Sammy (The Ball) Balsom.

Commission counsel Roland F. Wilson opened today's hearing by requesting the commissioner, Mr. Justice W. D. Roach, "that in view of evidence given by Balsom, crown attorneys be instructed to lay charges of perjury against him."

His Lordship answered: "I've had that in mind, but I am not sure the charges should be limited solely to perjury. . . . The matter will be discussed with crown attorneys without any delay."

'Americans Want Me Defeated'--P.M.

GUELPH — (UPI-CP-Special)—Prime Minister John Diefenbaker said last night Americans want his government defeated in next Monday's general election "because we don't do what we're told."

Defending Canada's dollar devaluation and its pegging at 92½ U.S. cents, Mr. Diefenbaker repeated what he said several times during the day—that he is more concerned with Canadian exporters and Canadian employment than the "howling" of U.S. businessmen and the U.S. press.

He told a rally of 1,100 in Guelph collegiate, where Mrs. Diefenbaker once taught, that he read recently that a majority of Americans want his government defeated. He said as long as he is Prime Minister he would look after Canada's interests first.

LED BY BUGLE BAND
Mr. Diefenbaker was led through Guelph's streets to the school by a bugle band.

At Galt, where he spoke in support of candidate Gordon Chaplin in Waterloo South, he said, "Every manufacturer and every farmer (in Canada) will be able to export to the United States where he was previously closed out."

Mr. Diefenbaker appears to have unveiled most if not all of his "Bulld Canada" platform for the next five years.

His speech covered the main points of his election bid as they have shaped up in recent days:

1. The jobless problem has been "licked" now.

2. The Liberals are a gloomy bunch, unchanged from the old days except for some "shadowy figures" behind Liberal Leader Lester Pearson.

3. Dollar devaluation is good for Canada and means more jobs.

4. The record of the Conservative government stands for all to see—and the future can be wonderful under Tory plans for national development. (Cont. on Page 10, Col. 1)
